The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various methods which have been proposed for the determination of the rate of reaction between a solid and a liquid. It is shown that the most reliable method is that of measuring the change in weight of the solid as the reaction proceeds. This method is applicable to all cases in which the solid is insoluble in the liquid and the reaction is not too rapid. In cases where the reaction is too rapid for this method to be applicable, other methods must be used. These include the measurement of the volume of gas evolved, the measurement of the change in viscosity of the liquid, and the measurement of the change in the refractive index of the liquid.
 The second part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the factors which influence the rate of reaction between a solid and a liquid. It is shown that the rate of reaction is influenced by the nature of the solid, the nature of the liquid, the temperature, and the surface area of the solid. The rate of reaction is also influenced by the presence of catalysts and inhibitors. The third part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the mechanism of the reaction between a solid and a liquid. It is shown that the reaction proceeds by the attack of the liquid on the surface of the solid, and that the rate of reaction is determined by the rate at which the liquid attacks the surface of the solid.

The rate of reaction between a solid and a liquid is influenced by the nature of the solid, the nature of the liquid, the temperature, and the surface area of the solid. The rate of reaction is also influenced by the presence of catalysts and inhibitors. The mechanism of the reaction between a solid and a liquid is discussed in the third part of the paper. It is shown that the reaction and that the rate of reaction is determined by the rate at which the liquid attacks the surface of the solid.
